Thinking of skipping your vacation? Don't.

Hello Rebecca,

With Victoria Day come and gone, the summer season has officially started.

Hopefully, you're contemplating summer vacation. More than two-thirds of us intend to travel between May and October, according to the Conference Board of Canada, regardless of pandemic issues and inflation-driven higher costs.

The benefits of taking a vacation are clear: It results in improved productivity, lower stress, and better overall mental health. Even if it's a staycation or a cross-border road trip, use your time off – you've earned it. Don't leave that money on the table.

Take a break from the financial headlines and refocus on the why behind your financial strategy: the freedom to spend more time with and protect the people you care about.

Author Anne Lamont said it best: "Almost everything will work again if you unplug it for a few minutes, including you."

Here are some great tips on summer travel, as well as other key information
