Listening for the Music

Hello Rebecca,

The world is an especially noisy place these days, with a seemingly never-ending parade of cacophonous commotion — interest-rate speculation, continuing high inflation, recession worries, political debates, wars and rumors of wars — to momentarily grab your attention before the next hubbub comes along to provide yet further distraction. With so much going on, it can be difficult to know how to focus on what's important for ensuring your financial security.

A recent article in the Financial Post has some great advice for just this reality: "Don't let the market noise drown out what's right for you." Rather than worrying about the pandemonium from all that is out of your control, work on filtering it out in order to hone in on the basics of your financial strategy. And though it's always easier, as the author points out, to "want to do right but not right now," focusing on the fundamentals will empower you by revealing what you can do right right now, rather than procrastinating till some later date.

Although it can be hard to find amidst all the noise, the "music" of a harmonious relationship between your financial basics and investment strategy is there to be
